Accepting No

<th>Skill to Teach</th>
<th>“Accepting ‘No’ for an Answer” (Teachers can choose to expand this lesson by using the book, I Just Don’t Like the Sound of No!, by Julia Cook). This lesson has several parts to it and can be split up into four or five lessons, if desired.</th>

<td>Objective</td>
<td>Students will generate situations in which they received a ‘no’ answer and evaluate the way they handled the situation. Students will practice the skill by role-playing the situations, playing “Mother, May I?”, and earning positive consequences by accepting ‘no’ for an answer in their day-to-day activities.</td>

| Materials Needed | - Skills poster or skill steps written on board
- Equipment to show you-tube video
- Large space to play “Mother, May I?”
- Decorated bulletin board
- I Just Don’t Like the Sound of No! by Julia Cook (optional)
- Stars out of thick paper |
| Planned Teaching | Ask students if they’ve ever been told ‘no’ before. When students respond, ask them what they did when they were told ‘no’ and ask how that turned out. Guide the conversation towards evaluating effective and less-effective ways to respond to the answer ‘no’.

Tell the students the steps of “Accepting ‘No’ for an Answer” and refer to your wall poster or write them on the board:
1. Look at the person.
2. Say ‘Okay’.
4. If you disagree, ask later.

Show the short video about how to accept ‘no’ for an answer. (This video also includes the skill of how to accept criticism and consequences.)

(Optional) Read the book I Just Don’t Like the Sound of No! by Julia Cook. Discuss what RJ learned. Ask students why it might be important to appropriately accept ‘no’ for an answer? |
Practice

- Tell students they will practice accepting ‘no’ for an answer. They will work with a partner and partner A will ask partner B for something or for permission. Partner B will say ‘no’ and partner A will demonstrate the skill of accepting ‘no’ for an answer. Students can choose their own scenario to ask for or you can give them a scenario. For example, for the first practice, you can instruct partner A to ask the “teacher” if they can go to the library and the “teacher” says ‘no’. For the second practice, partner B asks their “parent” if they can go to a friend’s house and the “parent” says ‘no’. Using home and school examples may help children generalize the skill.

- Students will also practice accepting ‘no’ for an answer by playing the game “Mother, May I? or Father, May I?” You need an open space. The teacher will be the “mother” or “father” and will stand on one end, alone. The children line up, shoulder-to-shoulder, on the other end, about 10 or 20 feet away. Teach the children some of the various steps of the game: i.e. baby steps, scissor steps, giant steps, jumping-jack steps, karate steps, or jump steps. Tell the children they will ask you, “Mother, may I take (a certain number of a particular type of) steps?” Prepare them that you might say ‘yes’ and you might say, ‘no’ and they need to follow the skill steps of how to accept ‘no’ for an answer so that the game will be fun for all. Ask the students to remind you of the steps of how to accept ‘no’ for an answer. During the game, take turns asking each child to ask for permission until someone reaches the teacher.

- (Optional) If you have read, I Just Don’t Like the Sound of No! by Julia Cook, ask the students to remind you of what RJ got to put up on the bulletin board when he said ‘yes’ to ‘no’. (A say ‘yes’ to ‘no’ star.) Tell the students that you will be ‘catching them being good’ and when you see them saying ‘yes’ to ‘no’, they will earn a star, get to write their name on it, and decorate it as they desire. You will place it on the “Say ‘yes’ to ‘no’” bulletin board.

Assessment

Assess and reward students with positive consequences or a say ‘yes’ to ‘no’ star. Use specific praise with students when issuing the consequence to ensure they understand they have earned the positive consequence for accepting ‘no’ for an answer.
